Ecological Integrity: Reconnecting Humans, Health and Habitat with Drs. Vandana Shiva and Mira Shiva

Center for Earth Jurisprudence
Conference and dinner
Tuesday, July 13, 2010
at the Sofitel Miami (Miami, Florida)

Dr. Vandana Shiva, author, renowned environmental activist and winner of the Right Livelihood Award (the "alternative Nobel Prize"), is the founder of Navdanya, a movement to protect biological and cultural diversity and food security that has helped create the largest direct marketing, fair trade organic network in India (www.navdanya.org).

Dr. Mira Shiva, physician, public health activist and founding member of the worldwide People's Health Movement (www.phmovement.org), has devoted three decades to issues of primary health care; the right to health, food and essential medicines; and gender and social justice.

They are joined by a panel of experts featuring:

Dr. Mahadev Bhat, associate professor at Florida International University overseeing the Agroecology Program, an innovative curricular and public engagement program focusing on issues relevant to sustainable and local agriculture and food production (http://agroecology.fiu.edu/).

Léonie Hermantin, deputy director of the Lambi Fund, a not-for-profit organization working for economic justice, democracy and alternative sustainable development in Haiti (www.lambifund.org).

Susan Luck, founder and director of the EarthRose Institute (www.earthrose.org), a not-for-profit organization that educates individuals, families and diverse communities about the environmental links to women and children's health.

Conference ($15 students; $45):	2:30 - 5:45 p.m.
Dinner, keynote by Dr. Vandana Shiva ($50):	6:00 - 8:00 p.m.

Both conference and dinner ($80 early registration; $90 after June 1, 2010)
